Aim and objectives	The purpose of the course is to provide students with basic knowledge and skills regarding the attitudes, practices, and behaviors of the most typical state actors from a comparative perspective. The course offers a broad approach to explaining the differences and commonalities among the world's major political systems, enabling students to develop a global perspective that distinguishes local political approaches. This course predominantly focuses on building knowledge of the political behaviors exhibited by typical political systems worldwide, within the context of the interaction between different modes of behavior and the political logic they adhere to. In this regard, the subject will concentrate on the criteria for classifying political systems into various forms of government, examining the political characteristics related to the origin and functioning of these systems, exploring their approaches to state-building and power control, and studying their forms of political systems covered in this subject and the means of their legitimation both externally and internally.
	 Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able to: Define the main concepts applied in Comparative Politics. Explain political history, institutions, political culture, political parties, interest groups, political issues, and major political conflicts in different political systems. Compare the main aspects of democratic and non-democratic political systems. Debate the role and importance of the state in the consolidation of the political system and economic development. Debate and write fluently and persuasively about key concepts and issues in the field of comparative politics.
